Blummer, B. (2006).Â In order for collection development librarians to justify the adoption of electronic books (e-books), they need to determine if e-books satisfy the information needs of patrons. One method to determine this is to measure e-book usage. This study compared the usage of 7,880 titles that were available in both print and e-book format at the Duke University Libraries.Â It notes changes in usage that have occurred with the addition of e-book catalog records in the library online catalog, and changes in selection patterns as librarians have gained more experience with the e-book. Recently, the University Library signaled its interest to HathiTrust leadership to retain additional titles during the second phase of this program, with plans to focus on filling gaps that exist in coverage from the programâ€™s first phase. This program provides a mechanism for ensuring that research libraries can continue to provide access to printed monograph collections into the future. Big Ten Academic Alliance (BTAA) Shared Print Repository 1.0 & 2.0.Â There are no plans to decrease the size of the collection to fit into the proposed facility. Retention and collection management decisions are governed by the aforementioned policies. The University Library is committed to preserving and providing access to our collections.
