INSEAD Women Leaders Programme. Closing the gender leadership gap. Jennifer Petriglieri. Even when women do attain key leadership positions, they can find themselves under a much stronger spotlight than men. Every aspect of their behaviour is scrutinised and they can be heavily penalised for acting in ways that demonstrate competent leadership, yet run counter to the traditional stereotype of being an empathetic, nurturing and "feminine" woman. And such leaders need to include the world's many capable women. It is up to organisations to keep building on the momentum we see today to make it happen. The first step often requires developing leadership programmes based around a deeper, systemic understanding of what's holding women back. Bibliographic Details.
